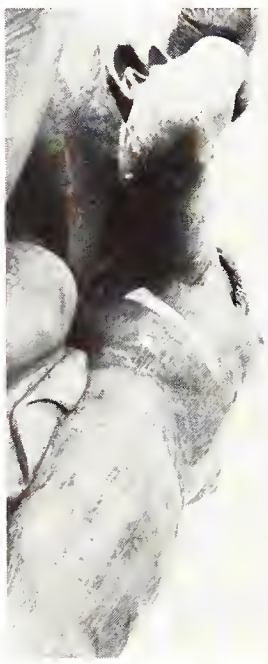
GRAND ROUNDS
1970

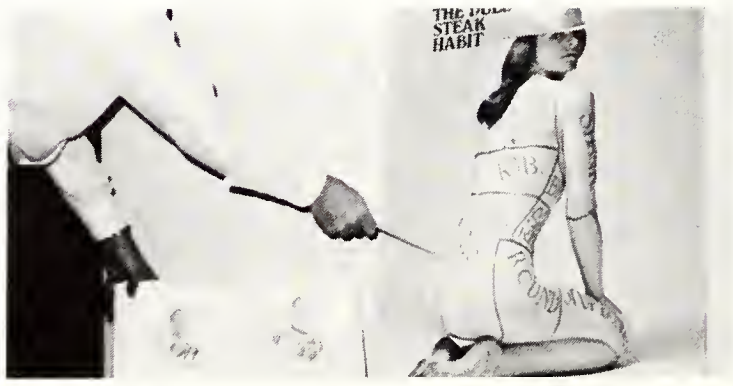
Georgetown University
School of Medicine

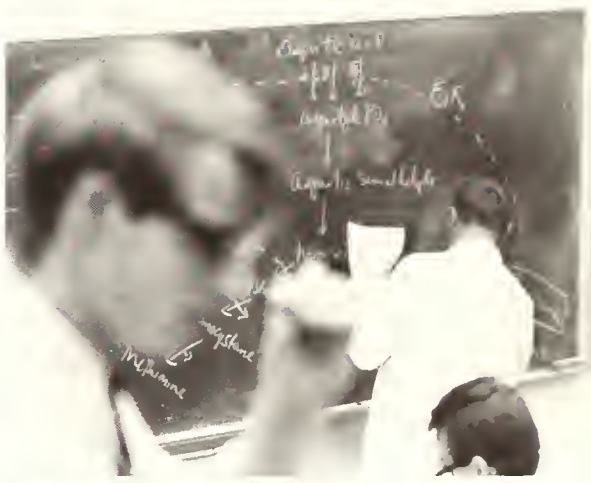
Washington, D.C.

Introduction

"It's all downhill after Head and Neck." With this naive idea we started going through the very diverse experiences of our year as freshmen. The systematic dissection and the memorizing of anatomical terms introduced us to a language that we were to use for the rest of our lives. The complexities of physiological and biochemical mechanisms often seemed completely irrelevant, but somehow this was the way our organ systems functioned. The inevitable self-analysis after many psychiatric conferences was disturbing to many, but things always looked brighter after a few beers at the Peacock. There was much more to come.

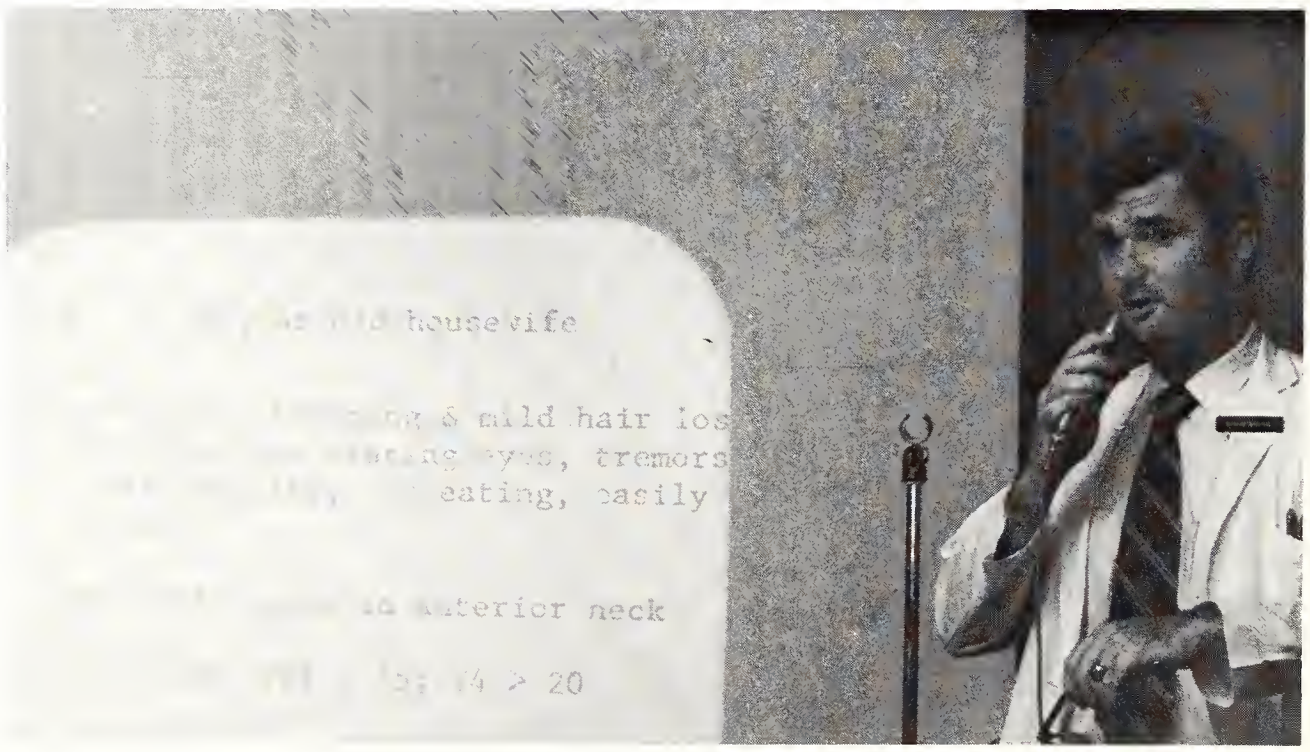






The subjects were now different, but the amount and complexity of the material were no less. After hours of looking for acid-fast bacilli no one would see we were to expose ourselves to this "bug." When many of us were asked to report to the Pharmacology office, invariably to discuss the results of the previous test, we did not seem to mind. We were also introduced to self-experimentation and would often use our classmates as "guinea pigs" on techniques we were soon to try out on real patients. It took a genuine politician to get a "complete history and physical" from patients who informed us that three other doctors had already seen them.

In our junior year we plunged into the new world of clinical medicine. Early morning rounds, history, physical, and differential diagnosis, a good doctor-patient relationship, and SCUT were some of our primary concerns. Slowly we were becoming more and more involved in this "new bag"—Medicine. Our tests became less and public speaking abilities were an important asset for our presentations. We were introduced to the subtle politics of dealing with nurses, attending physicians, and the administration . . . and we did get more elective time.



We were now accepting more responsibilities, writing orders, moving closer to the patient, our patient. In a two-week vacation our status was abruptly changed to that of a practitioner. We worked as "interns" in Arlington Hospital and D.C. General, with private patients and with those essentially our own, in emergency rooms as well as intensive care facilities. The variety of experiences was very rewarding. Even some of the babies we delivered were named after us!

We took short vacations, had interviews and were soon matched to hospitals all over the nation. For most of us this was our last year at Georgetown—an unforgettable year.

Dedication

In our careers in Medicine we learn from many people. Our professors guide us through the many sources of knowledge and information. Their task is an admirable one. The interns and residents are also eager and important contributors to our education. However, their combined efforts would be of little value in a vacuum, that is, without the knowledge and experience acquired from our patients.

We dedicate this publication to them. For with their suffering and with their smiles they have taught us about the problems and the joys of our profession. We hope to remain perceptive of their lessons to become better physicians at their service.

Always ask the patient, he knows what's wrong.
